DUKES LONDON HISTORY

The history of DUKES LONDON, St. James's Place, can be traced back to 1532 when King Henry VIII bought a convent at the bottom of the hill and replaced it with St. James's Palace.

During the reign of Charles II (1660-1665), the neighbouring St. James's Palace became highly fashionable and many elegant coffee houses sprung up in the area. The courtyard around DUKES led to the house of the Duchess of Cleveland, one of the King's mistresses. She bore him three sons – the Dukes of Cleveland, Grafton and Northumberland. After the King's death, the courtyard became known as Cleveland Court and contained two houses, which formed a small inn.

These buildings were demolished in 1885 and replaced with what is essentially the DUKES Hotel of today. The new building was originally used as London chambers for the sons of Britain's nobility. It became DUKES Hotel in 1908.

Today DUKES is considered to be one of London's best small hotels.
